

Women in Migrant Urban Workforce

What is the issue?

\n\n

\n

- While women constitute a considerable share of urban migrants, but governments seems blind to their concerns.

\n

- Our policy makers need to model plans for enhancing the lot of migrants in general and urban-women migrants in particular.

\n

\n\n

What are the trends in women migration?

\n\n

\n

- A recent UN report says India is on the “brink of an urban revolution”, as its population in towns and cities are expected to reach 600 million by 2031.

\n

- Fuelled by migration, megacities of India (Delhi, Mumbai and Kolkata) will be among the largest urban concentrations in the world.

\n

- Interestingly, the 2011 Census reveals that women constitute a major share of the urban migrant population, which is a new trend.

\n

- Marriage-induced migration continues to be the predominant reason for the overwhelming presence of women among migrants.

\n

- But its importance has declined post liberalisation as export-oriented economic development has created demand for women labour.

\n

- An “Indiaspend analysis” shows that women migrating for work grew by 101%, which is more than double the growth rate for men, which stands at 48.7%.

\n

- However, both the Census and National Sample Survey Office (NSSO) have failed to capture this growing trend of women’s work related migration.

\n

- Consequently, such surveys treat women as secondary earners and ignore her other motivations for migration and her labour participation post migration.

\n

What are the concerns?

\n\n

\n

- Overall - Internal migration is currently very high but governments continue to exclude migrants from urban development policies.
- Even the enactment of “Inter-State Migrant Workmen (Regulation of Employment and Conditions of Service) Act” hasn’t yielded desired results.
- Women - Female migration trends has not yet recognised women as economic actors, thereby their experiences in migration remains unexplored.
- They are largely seen as either secondary labour force or mere family baggage that is merely accompanying their male counterparts.
- Migrants in general are faced with challenges in getting basic documentation done, accessing social entitlements and financial services.
- Women migrants are further disadvantaged as they are underpaid at work, vulnerable to sexual crime, and face maternity related complications.
- Hazardous work environments further their woes, and a good percentage of women workers face “respiratory illness, ergonomic problems (body aches), mental and reproductive health issues.

\n

\n\n

What is the way ahead?

\n\n

\n

- Recognising that women migrants have a right to equal access to employment, adequate income and social protection is primarily needed.
- There should be better data collection to capture the complex dynamics of gender-specific migration to help the state respond better to their needs.

\n

- We need to enhance vocational training programs to improve employability of women migrants and their access to support services.
\n
- Kerala has initiated to provide insurance and free medical treatment for its 30 million migrant workers, which needs to be emulated by others.
\n
- The political inclusion of migrants would also democratise urban governance and ensure the building of cities on the basis of gender equality.
