

Afghanistan, India, and Donald Trump

What's the news?

\n\n

\n

- Donald Trump will take over as the 45th President of the USA on Jan 20 next year, at a time when the U.S. remains engaged in the longest war in its history — the war in Afghanistan. He will be the third President to deal with the war launched in 2001.

\n

- Even though 'Operation Enduring Freedom' ended in 2014 implying an end to formal combat operations, the U.S. still maintains troops under 'Operation Resolute Support'.

\n

\n\n

What are the gains and losses?

\n\n

\n

- The U.S. alone has spent more than $800 billion in Afghanistan, of which $115 billion has been spent on reconstruction.

\n

- The ISAF suffered 3,500 fatal casualties, with the U.S. bearing 2400 lives. The Afghan civilian and security forces casualties are estimated at 31,000 and 30,000 respectively.

\n

- At the NATO summit in Warsaw, it was agreed to maintain the international troop presence till 2020 while providing annual support of $4.5 billion for the Afghan security forces.

\n

- Some progress has been registered. Life expectancy and Literacy rate have both gone up. The number of children in school is now more than 8 million (from 9 lakhs). But, this progress can be sustained only if peace can be restored.

\n

\n\n

What are the different political approaches?

\n\n

\n

- Former president of Afghanistan, Mr. Karzai referred to India “as an old friend” and Pakistan as “a brother and conjoined twin”. It really does capture Pakistan’s critical role.

\n

- Eventually, he became exasperated with Pakistan’s rebuffs and tried, unsuccessfully, to open up his own channels for dialogue with Taliban.

\n

- Mr. Ghani went a step further. He tacitly accepted Pakistan’s demand that Afghanistan diminish the salience of its relationship with India, if Pakistan would play a positive role to ensure political reconciliation.

\n

- However, as insurgency grew, he publicly blamed Pakistan of sending “a message of war” when he had held out a hand of peace.

\n

- In their own fashion, both Mr. Bush and Mr. Obama saw the Pakistan problem but were content to manage the situation rather than push for a solution.

\n

\n\n

Did Pakistan overreach?

\n\n

\n

- What Pakistan has been seeking is to exercise a veto over Kabul’s relations with Delhi, which the Afghans are unwilling to concede.

\n

- Pakistan’s policies towards both India and Afghanistan are determined primarily by the Army which sees India as an existential threat.

\n

- Since relations with India are unlikely to normalise in the foreseeable future, the only way out for Pakistan to play a constructive role in Afghanistan is to accept the idea of Afghan sovereignty and autonomy and refrain from making it a zone of India-Pakistan rivalry.

\n

- Unless Pakistan changes its attitude, political reconciliation in Afghanistan will remain unlikely.

\n

\n\n

What about Taliban's role?

\n\n

\n

- The challenge for Kabul is that it has to engage in multiple reconciliation processes — with the Taliban and with the Pakistani army.

\n

- The hardline Taliban represented by the Haqqani network is determined to continue the fight militarily.

\n

- However, even the more moderate who are willing to talk demand the exit of all foreign forces from Afghanistan. Not only could this bring about a collapse of the fragile coalition but it would also reduce the international financial support.

\n

- Power sharing can be worked out, but no government in Kabul can accept this Taliban redline.

\n

\n\n

What is the “India factor”?

\n\n

\n

- India has had the most effective economic cooperation programme, having spent more than $2 billion and committed another billion dollars earlier this year. Indians have also lost lives in deliberate but this has not diminished the Indian role.

\n

- It has only cemented Afghan-Indian relations which are now developing a military dimension. Never again will India be forced to close down its embassy in Kabul as it happened during the Taliban regime.

\n

\n\n

Concluding remarks

\n\n

\n

- When Donald Trump takes charge, he will find that he has little choice in the matter. A complete withdrawal is out of question.

\n

- His challenge will be to change the calculus of the Pakistani establishment, increase capabilities of the Afghan security forces, and, in 2019, support an election in Afghanistan that brings about a more cohesive government.

\n

- In all this, he will find the Indian government to be a reliable and trusted partner.
