Why in news?

The Supreme Court (SC) is considering whether the constitutional courts can set a timeline for the speaker to decide on disqualification petitions under the Tenth Schedule (Antidefection law).

- Anti-defection law Inserted in the Constitution in 1985 through 52nd amendment act as the Tenth schedule.
- Purpose It lays down the process by which legislators may be disqualified on grounds of defection by the Presiding Officer of a legislature based on a petition by any other member of the House.
- The law applies to both Parliament and state assemblies.
- Grounds of defection
 - $\,\circ\,$ If he/she either voluntarily gives up the membership of his party.
 - $\circ\,$ If he/she disobeys the directives of the party leadership on a vote. This implies that a legislator defying (abstaining or voting against) the party whip on any issue can lose his membership of the House.
 - If a nominated member joins a political party after 6 months of being elected.
 - $\circ\,$ If any independently elected member joins any political party.
- Exception The law allows a party to merge with or into another party provided that at least two-thirds of its legislators are in favour of the merger.
- Time limit The law does not specify a period for the Presiding Officer to decide on a disqualification plea.
- Judicial Review The presiding officer's decision on the legitimacy of reasons for disqualification or defection is subject to judicial review.

Key supreme court judgements on anti-defection law

- Kihoto Hollohan vs Zachillhu (1992) The SC ruled that the Speaker's decision was subject to judicial review on grounds of malafides, violation of constitutional mandate, non-compliance with principles of natural justice, etc.
- Keisham Meghachandra Singh vs. Speaker, Manipur Legislative Assembly (2020) The Court held that the Speaker cannot employ delaying tactics and has to decide the disqualification petition within a reasonable period.
