

Banking Crisis - The ways ahead

What is the issue?

\n\n

\n

- RBI Deputy Governor Acharya recently acknowledged that the financial health of India's public sector banks (PSB) is shocking.

\n

- Also, the extremely slow pace of reforms to address NPAs is worrying.

\n

\n\n

What is the background?

\n\n

\n

- For the first time in at least two decades, the loan books of the PSBs shrank as advances fell by Rs 1.35 lakh crore in 2016-17.

\n

- This is not surprising since weak balance sheets cannot support healthy credit growth.

\n

- Far from kick-starting growth, Indian PSBs actually need capital to merely survive.

\n

- The government is in no position to supply the capital to kick-start the PSBs.

\n

\n\n

What are the measures taken so far to address the NPAs?

\n\n

\n

- The Central Repository of Information on Large Credits (CRILC) was created in 2014.

\n

- Asset Quality Review (AQR) was initiated in 2015.

\n

- Also, the enactment of the Insolvency and Bankruptcy Code (IBC) in 2016 helped plug a massive regulatory gap.
\n
- While this was expected to provide for a quicker resolution of NPAs, some of the recent court verdicts in insolvency cases may queer the pitch.
\n

\n\n

What are the measures being considered?

\n\n

- Recapitalisation - The “Indradhanush scheme” for recapitalising banks, although a good initiative, it might not be enough to address the current crisis.
\n
- The PSBs need a far more powerful impetus that could save them, from the non-performing assets (NPAs) burden, which in some cases is in excess of their net worth.
\n
- Disinvestment - The Cabinet Committee on Economic Affairs had authorised an alternative mechanism to bring down the government’s stake in the PSBs to 52%.
\n
- But this is not a practical solution given the political compulsions as well as the lack of investor appetite in buying weak banks.
\n
- Mergers - The Union Cabinet has also been pushing for mergers.
\n
- But as the case with the State Bank of India shows, mergers are no guarantees for turnarounds.
\n
- In fact, they may pull down banks that were performing well.
\n
- Also, most PSBs have exposure to the same set of stressed assets and a merged entity might end up with a larger exposure to stressed sectors.
\n

\n\n

What is one possible way ahead?

\n\n

- The government and PSB boards should consider selling off or divesting stakes in subsidiaries and non-core businesses.

\n

- The money so raised can be ploughed into their core operations.

\n

- There is much to learn from PSBs that have reduced their stakes in their insurance ventures.
