What are the challenges to organise simultaneous elections?

\n

- $\bullet$  The CEC recently ruled out the possibility of holding elections to the Lok Sabha this December along with polls to the Assemblies of four States. \n
- In addition to the constitutional amendment needed to extend or curtail assembly and parliamentary terms, the process also is resource intensive.  $\n$
- $\bullet$  Simultaneous elections would need more number of "electronic voting machines" (EVMs) and voter-verifiable paper audit (VVPAT) units. \n
- Moreover, ensuring the availability of VVPATs everywhere poses a logistical challenge, with dates for elections in 4 states approaching soon.  $\ensuremath{\backslash n}$
- $\bullet$  Further, simultaneous elections will require the use of 24 lakh EVMs, but currently the election commission has only 12 lakh EVMs. \n

What are the varied opinions regarding simultaneous elections?

 $n\n$

- A wide political consensus, as well as legislative cooperation from various parties, is required for holding simultaneous elections.
- $\bullet$  It is natural that parties that control legislatures constituted in recent months or years would resist any curtailment of their tenures. \n
- While those in the Opposition may prefer simultaneous polls if it means Assembly elections being advanced.
- Significantly, BJP president Amit Shah has written to the Law Commission favouring simultaneous polls, giving a fillip to the idea.
- The crux of the argument in favour of the concept is that the country is perpetually in election mode, resulting in lack of focus on governance.  $$
- $\bullet$  The second contention is that scattered polling results in extra expenditure, which can be effectively reduced through simultaneous polls. \n
- Hence, the ultimate question before India is whether altering legislative terms undermine representative democracy and federalism.
- Considering the immense challenges, it would be far more productive for political parties to focus on basic electoral reforms to curb expenses.
