

Change in Financial Year

What is the issue?

\n\n

The government is considering the proposal to change the financial year from April-March to January-December.

\n\n

What are the merits?

\n\n

\n

- The shifting of financial year will align India with the prevailing practice of developed countries.

\n

- This will be a progressive, convenient transition for the Indian economy as it gets increasingly integrated to the global economy.

\n

- For MNC firms in India, which are currently dealing with two types of financial years here and at the parent country, a uniform structure will be a relief to manage their accounts.

\n

- The change will also align the financial year with the monsoon cycle and also with the country's crop harvests both for Rabi and Kharif seasons.

\n

- Another important factor is that at present the budget cycle suffers due to lack of sufficient data on crop income, monsoon forecast etc.

\n

- Presently, before the budget presentation in February, the government doesn't get any solid data on monsoon forecast for new financial year.

\n

- The rain gamble causes difficulties in formulating the budget.

\n

- Most importantly, it is about time India moved on from colonial tradition and decided on issues based on merit.

\n

\n\n

What are the demerits?

\n\n

\n

- If we want the transition, then major changes like shifting Parliamentary Sessions, Budget presentation in Nov-Dec, etc., will be needed.

\n

- The one time implementation cost along with major financial reforms like GST rollout and merger of plan and non-plan expenditure may be too big a burden to handle.

\n

- Already, there is confusion in the industry with the change in the tax system when the GST finally happens.

\n

- A shift to new fiscal year, too soon, will add to this.

\n

- Also, a host of statutes and taxation laws will need to be amended for the change to take place.

\n

- Thus, the move will be a costly and cumbersome administrative exercise for both companies as well as the government.

\n

- The economic benefits would definitely outweigh the administrative difficulties that will arise initially for the implementation.

\n

- The change will indeed be a progressive step it seems there is no urgency to implement when the GST is still facing multiple hurdles.
