

Geopolitical Realities Favor China

What is the issue?

\n\n

\n

- PM Modi is scheduled to visit Beijing soon for the “Shanghai Cooperation Organisation” (SCO) summit.

\n

- More importantly, an informal bilateral with China (on the sidelines) is on the agenda, which assumes significance in the current global geo-political context.

\n

\n\n

What is the emerging geopolitical context in the international arena?

\n\n

\n

- In the backdrop of turbulence in global politics and some domestic concerns about India “softening” its China policy, PM Modi is slated to visit China.

\n

- Confrontation - Tensions between major international players has been mounting with the “US (and allies) vs. Russia” standoff arguably getting worse.

\n

- Both countries have been confronting each other through proxies in major conflict zones like Ukraine, Syria and Afghanistan.

\n

- The recent U.S.-French-British missile strikes in Syria were a significant flare up although it has now emerged that the Russians were intimidated in advance.

\n

- This prompt intimidation helped in moving out people and equipment in time.

\n

- But there is always a serious risk of miscalculation at the local level that might spark off a direct confrontation between the major powers.

\n

- US Sanctions - The U.S. has passed a new law called “Countering America’s Adversaries through Sanctions Act” (CAATSA).

\n

- This empowers the US President to impose sanctions on any company/entity which has business ties with a country that is already facing US sanctions.
- Notably, Russia is currently under US sanctions - which implies that countries like India, which have deep defence ties with Russia, could also be implicated.
- Significantly, US had recently widened its sanctions ambit by cracking down on Russian multinationals whose stocks are internationally traded.
- China’s Detente - While the U.S. has been increasing pressure on Russia, it has strikingly started soft peddling its dealing with China.
- Notably, India is being asked sternly to make efforts to address its trade surplus of about $25 billion with the U.S. repeatedly.
- But on the contrary, China holds a humongous $375 billion trade surplus with the US, which is now being meekly requested to addressing this issue.
- More at odds is the fact that 2017 alone saw China enhance its trade surplus with the US by about $28 billion.
- Agreements - USA’s decision to withdraw from the Trans-Pacific Partnership (TPP), has effectively benefited China in the “Pacific Rim”.
- This has given China more leverage in negotiating the “Regional Comprehensive Economic Partnership” (RCEP) to its advantage.
- Notably, RCEP is being envisioned as a trade block comprising of the “ASEAN + six” countries of which India is also a part.
- Unpredictability - Uncertainty prevailing in the seemingly impulsive U.S. foreign policy is driving even its closest allies to hedge their options.
- Japanese PM Abe and Mr. Xi are to exchange visits soon, which is a significant development for the countries that were at the brink of war some 5 years ago.
- Japan (like India) is also concerned about China’s global assertiveness and the geopolitical implications of its “Belt and Road Initiative” (BRI).
- Yet, Mr. Abe seems to have seen merit in engaging with China as US is has been very inconsistent in its commitment to the region.

\n

- China on the other hand derives a positive from the fact that a longstanding stated close US ally is open to engaging with it on significant domains.

\n

\n\n

What are the implications for India?

\n\n

\n

- The escalation of the US Russia acrimony could put India under intense pressure, which could prove detrimental in sustaining its defence arsenal.
- \n
- Russia has already upgraded its defence ties Pakistan and China, and it could become bilaterally catastrophic for India to disengage with Russia.
- \n
- Chinese Outreach - As the Russia-China axis has strengthened lately, it is prudent for India to engage now China to hedge its diplomatic manoeuvres.
- \n
- Additionally, it is also a positive that, the US policy focus is presently engaged elsewhere, and that the Chinese frontier is seeing a worldwide easing.
- \n
- Core Interests - A softening stand towards China doesn't mean that India will have to compromise on its core economic and strategic interests.
- \n
- We can't overlook China's foray into the Indian neighbourhood, the border skirmishes, and the China-Pak Economic Corridor (CPEC).
- \n
- But we can seek to cooperate on other areas despite these thorny issues with, which could eventually help in resolving these core concerns too.
- \n
- While asymmetries in relationships are inevitable, it is the responsibility of the policymakers to address them - which is often better when done discreetly.
- \n
- Public Outreach - The course of India-China relations in the past couple of years had created a politicised narrative of bilateral frictions.
- \n
- CPEC, Doklam, NSG, BRI and confrontations at the UNSC have all been areas led to the build-up of a strong anti-China opinion among the Indian masses.

\n

- There is hence a public disconnect to India's current political outreach towards China, which needs to be addressed through people-to-people engagements.

\n

- The geopolitical reality demands India to maintain an equidistant engagement with all major powers for the time being.
