

India's Position on RCEP

What is the issue?

\n\n

\n

- Negotiations on the 16-member “Regional Comprehensive Economic Partnership” (RCEP) bloc agreement have gone adrift.

\n

- India should carefully weigh the pros and cons of the trade bloc.

\n

\n\n

What is India's current trade situation with the RCEP bloc?

\n\n

\n

- RCEP has a total of 16 members - China, ASEAN (10 countries), Australia, New Zealand, India, Japan and South Korea.

\n

- India's trade engagement with these countries has not been favourable, when seen in terms of the trade deficit.

\n

- NITI Aayog has pointed out that trade deficits with the RCEP member countries has risen from $9 billion in 2004-05 to over $80 billion now.

\n

- India already has a “Free Trade Agreement” (FTA) with ASEAN, Japan and South Korea, which is largely the reason for the current unfair trade situation.

\n

- Significantly, even without an FTA, trade deficit with China rose from $0.6 billion to about $63 billion in 2017-18, or 60% of India's overall trade deficit.

\n

- This surge in Chinese imports — from electrical, electronics, plastics, chemicals, boilers etc..., has undeniably hurt Indian manufacturing.

\n

- Notably, increase in imports from these countries hasn't helped to increase the local manufacturing sector or technologies.

\n

\n\n

What is ideal for India?

\n\n

\n

- A government committed to 'Make in India' cannot be expected to embrace a deal that entails zero tariffs on over 70% of goods traded with China.

\n

- Further, while FTAs in itself hasn't paid off sufficiently for India's industry, a higher level of openness with ASEAN is undesirable.

\n

- While this is a protectionist view, it is also a product of both domestic and global circumstances, and hence not necessarily bad.

\n

- Given the discontent over lack of jobs and agrarian distress, this isn't an opportune time to throw open sensitive sectors such as dairy products.

\n

- Hence, India needs to bargain hard and play tough to secure a better deal from RCEP members or consider foregoing the deal altogether.

\n

\n\n

How does the future look?

\n\n

\n

- The push for trade blocs has acquired a new urgency, with the Trump administration unleashing a trade war of sorts against China.

\n

- In this context, India too has reversed its years-long policy of reducing tariffs by raising them across the board in the last Budget.

\n

- Further, Malaysia's new PM has mooted an 'East Asian Economic Caucus' to offset China's economic might and trade surplus with the region.

\n

- In this context, India should seriously consider the impact of any exit from RCEP on its links to global supply chains and take a rational decision.
