

Korean Peace - A Comprehensive Analysis

What is the issue?

\n\n

\n

- North Korea has lately been engaged in a string of diplomatic engagements to resolve the nuclear standoff in the Korean peninsula.

\n

- While this is a positive, the other stakeholders will have to adopt a pragmatic approach to negotiations in order to achieve sustain peace.

\n

\n\n

\n\n

What is the historic perspective to the Korean crisis?

\n\n

\n

- History - The Korean War (1950-53) split the Korean peninsula into the North and South Korea along the 38th parallel latitude.

\n

- The North was communist dictatorship backed by USSR, while the South flourished into a vibrant democracy that is part of the US security alliance.

\n

- After the fall of USSR and re-unification of East and West Germany, the North Korean regime got isolated internationally and saw a threat to its survival.

\n

- Notably, both the North and South Korean governments claim to be the official representatives of the entire of Korea and do not recognize each other.

\n

- Survival - While China is North Korea's strongest ally, despite pressure from Pyongyang, Beijing recognized South Korea in 1992.

\n

- South Korea has now developed into a strong economic power and has become one of China's biggest trade partner and investment destination.

\n

- All these factors have made North Korean leadership increasingly insecure as an US assisted South Korean annexation of North loomed large.

\n

- While both Koreas have a stated official policy for reunification, neither seems ready to accept the political leadership of the other.

\n

- Consequently, North Korea took refuge in developing nuclear weapons for securing its political survival since 2006.

\n

\n\n

What caused the recent tensions?

\n\n

\n

- Weapons Program - North has conducted 6 nuclear tests thus far and the latest one in Sept 2017 is said to be 6 times as powerful as Hiroshima bomb.

\n

- The current North Korean supreme leader Kim Jong Un took over from his father Kim Jong Il in 2011 and has since accelerated the weapons mission.

\n

- While his father conducted 16 missile launch tests during his 16 year rule till 2011, the current leader in his 7 years rule has conducted 80 launches.

\n

- The last test in Nov 2017 successfully demonstrated the "Hwasong-15 missile", which has a 12,000 km range, and has the entire US territory within its reach.

\n

- Diplomatic Standoff - The Weapons program got the whole world concerned and multiple sanctions were passed in the UN.

- \n
- These effectively cut-off all international ties of North Korea except China which continued to trade defying sanctions (although largely unofficially).
- \n
- Notably, China too got concerned due to
- \n
- Due to North's continued intimidations, Mr. Trump had threatened the Mr. Kim with a furious attack like never before in human history.
- \n

\n\n

What are the evolving diplomatic engagements?

\n\n

- \n
- Despite the harsh rhetoric of the other stakeholders, South Korean president Mr. Moon had been paddling a softer approach towards Pyongyang all along.
- \n
- Consequently, in Jan 2018, Mr. Kim had spelt out his willingness to negotiate a solution, which set of a new diplomatic breakthrough.
- \n
- North Korea participated in the recent Winter Olympic Games hosted by South Korea in Feb, and also Mr. Kim's sister led a delegation to the South Korea.
- \n
- Kim has also paused his weapons program and he recently travelled to Beijing for a short diplomatic meet with the Chinese premier Mr. Xi Jinping.
- \n
- A South Korean delegeation also visited Pyongyang, and Mr. Kim is said to have conveyed his willingness to denuclearise if negotiations are successful.
- \n
- Additonally, North and South Korean leadership is touted to meet in April at the "Peace House in Panmunjom" for furthering the warmth.
- \n
- Also, the North Koran and US leadership are expected to meet sometime in May, which is touted to be the most significant part of the engagement.
- \n

\n\n

What are the expectations of various stakeholders?

\n\n

- \n
- South Korea - South wants to restore peace in the peninsula by sustaining

this dialogue and furthering the cause of reunification.

\n

- It would also like to be kept in loop with any US decision regarding the North to ensure that its interests aren't compromised.

\n

- Notably, despite the multi-power geopolitics in the Korean peninsula, the current initiatives are solely powered by the North and South Korea.

\n

- North Korea - The North has been effectively isolated from the world due to sanctions, and it would like all sanctions to be lifted to help its economy.

\n

- It would also want to ensure its regime survival and its concerns regarding the massive US troop presence in South Korea also needs to be addressed.

\n

- While the desire for reunification is strong in both the Koreas, current engagements can increase the chances of a mutual and peaceful unification.

\n

- China - It hopes that the peace process will result in denuclearisation of its neighbourhood and withdrawal of the US troop and arms from South Korea.

\n

- While the reunification of the Koreas isn't to China's liking, the possibility of that happening anytime soon is low and isn't concern for Beijing currently.

\n

- USA - For the US, it is treaty obligated to protect South Korea in addition to its assumed role of being the "world saviour".

\n

- Additionally, it would want to curtail Beijing's increasing clout in the region, which demands an increased engagement in region's conflicts.

\n

- But there are multiple hardliners in the Trump administration, who might vouch for unrealistic expectations and thwart a deal, which is a genuine risk.

\n

- Others - Japan is also a key member in the Korean neighbourhood, and has been advocating a hard-line on North Korea for long.

\n

- Notably, it's also part of the US military alliance and fears that a pro-North Korean shift by US would weaken its case vis-a-vis China.

\n

- Additionally, Russia was an erstwhile player in the region during the Soviet era and has been asserting itself worldwide again under Mr. Putin.

\n

- It may want to engage and has to be satiated through suitable dialogues.
