

Mumbai Stampede - Multiplicity of Agencies and Accountability

What is the issue?

\n

- Mumbai's Elphinstone Road railway bridge recently witnessed a horrific stampede killing and injuring many.
- \bullet Notably, the Government Railway Police (GRP) and the Mumbai city police argued over each other's jurisdiction, instead of coordinating. \n

What is the larger governance concern?

\n

• This jurisdictional confusion is indicative of the larger governance flaw in relation with Mumbai's infrastructure.

\n

• There are too many agencies and no one is willing to take responsibility when a tragedy takes place.

• This accountability and jurisdictional anomaly is plaguing much of Mumbai's development discourse.

\n

• Ex: There are at least five agencies that handle roads in Mumbai.

\n

1. BMC.

\n

2. State Public Works Department.

3. Mumbai Metropolitan Region Development Authority.

4. Maharashtra State Road Development Corporation.

\n

5. In some cases even the Slum Rehabilitation Authority. \n

- \bullet In most cities around the world, the city's ultimate control is with the mayor. \n
- But in Mumbai, the mayor has been reduced to a figurehead.
- The real powers lie with the municipal commissioner, who is appointed by the State government.
- \bullet The powerful standing committee, comprising elected representatives, can frame policies, draft bye-laws, and sanction the city's budget. \n
- \bullet But the person to oversee and implement everything is the commissioner. \n
- Besides, a large majority of the State's elected legislators have no stake in the city's progress.

What is to be done?

 $n\n$

\n

- Notably this is not the case only with Mumbai but is an issue hampering development in many cities in India.
- There is thus a dire need for ruling out the jurisdictional ambiguity as a result of multiplicity of agencies.
- Mumbai and other cities of India need a single coordinating agency with adequate autonomy and power to make decisions.
- This is essential to ensure accountability as well as to take forward the implementation of many drafted developmental plans.
- \bullet Political will is also very important to materialise all these. $\ensuremath{^{\backslash n}}$
