

Need for Non-Aligned Movement

What is the issue?

\n\n

The recent developments in the international order reflect the need for a renewed non-aligned movement as a soft balancing mechanism against powerful states.

\n\n

What was the soft balancing strategy?

\n\n

\n

- The Non-Aligned Movement (NAM) and its precursor, the Bandung Afro-Asian conference in 1955 were examples of this.

\n

- It was adopted by the weaker states towards great powers engaged in intense rivalry and conflict after the Second World War.

\n

- The newly emerging states had little material ability to constrain superpower conflict and arms build-ups.

\n

- They hence, under the leadership of India's Jawaharlal Nehru, Egypt's Gamal Abdel Nasser and Indonesia's Sukarno adopted a soft balancing strategy, the NAM.

\n

- It was later joined by Yugoslavia's Josip Broz Tito.

\n

- It aimed at challenging the superpower excesses and was a mechanism for preventing the global order from sliding into war.

\n

\n\n

Was NAM successful?

\n\n

\n

- In the long run, some of the goals of NAM were achieved.

\n

- Despite its shortcomings, the NAM and the Afro-Asian grouping acted as a limited soft balancing mechanism.
\n
- It attempted to delegitimise the threatening behaviour of the superpowers.
\n
- It was particularly through their activism at the UN and other such forums including that on Disarmament.
\n
- The non-aligned declarations on nuclear testing and nuclear non-proliferation helped concretise the 1963 Partial Test Ban Treaty.
\n
- They also helped create several nuclear weapon free zones as well as formulate the Nuclear Non-proliferation Treaty.
\n
- The tradition of 'non-use of nuclear weapons' was strengthened partially due to non-aligned countries' activism at the UN.
\n
- Also, the UNGA declared decolonisation as a key objective in 1960.
\n
- It was practised, especially in the 1950s and 1960s, in Africa, parts of Asia and the Caribbean.
\n
- NAM definitely deserves partial credit for ending colonialism through their activism at the UN General Assembly.
\n

\n\n

Did NAM lose its relevance?

\n\n

- In the 1970s, some of the key players, including India, began to lose interest in the movement.
\n
- They started forming coalitions with one or the other superpower to handle their conflicts with their neighbours.
\n
- The Western countries often portrayed non-alignment as pro-Soviet or ineffective.
\n
- The general intellectual opposition was the result of the Western scholarly bias against a coalitional move by the weaker states.
\n
- In the hierarchical international system, the weaker states are expected to simply abide by the dictates of the stronger ones.

\n

\n\n

How is the international order at present?

\n\n

\n

- The great powers are once again launching a new round of nuclear arms race, territorial expansion and militarisation of the oceans.

\n

- The freedom of navigation activities of the U.S. is generating hostile responses from China.

\n

- In turn, China is building artificial islets and military bases in the South China Sea and expanding its naval interests into the Indian Ocean.

\n

- The U.S. as the reigning hegemon will find the Chinese takeover threatening and try different methods to dislodge it.

\n

- If the present trends continue, a military conflict in the South China Sea is likely and the naval competition will take another decade or so to become intense.

\n

- Smaller states would be the first to suffer if there is a war in the Asia-Pacific or an intense Cold War develops between the U.S. and China.

\n

\n\n

Why is NAM needed now?

\n\n

\n

- A renewed activism by leading global south countries may be necessary to delegitimise the new imperial ventures.

\n

- These states must play a balancing role to avoid the international order from deteriorating and to prevent any new forms of cold and hot wars.

\n

- China, the U.S. and Russia need to be balanced and restrained.

\n

- Some countries are already showing some elements of strategic autonomy favoured by the NAM.

\n

- Developing countries can engage more with China and India and restrain the U.S. and Russia from aggravating military conflict in Asia-Pacific.
\n
- More concrete initiatives are needed by the emerging states in the Association of Southeast Asian Nations (ASEAN) grouping.
\n
- The soft balancing by non-superpower states has a key role to play in this.
