

Tackling a Rising China

What is the issue?

\n\n

\n

- The recent Quadrilateral alliance and the consequent talk of an 'Asian NATO' have brought the India-China rivalry back to the limelight.

\n

- Balancing a rising China requires a great deal of India's strategic attention in the years ahead.

\n

\n\n

How prospective is China?

\n\n

\n

- China is becoming a global leader in terms of composite national strength and international influence.

\n

- Globally, there is certainly a power vacuum, left by Donald Trump's 'reluctant superpower.'

\n

- If China rightly utilises this power vacuum, its superpower ambitions are bound to have a system-shaping impact on the Asian region.

\n

- There could possibly be China-led alliances, Chinese client states and the establishment of Chinese spheres of influence.

\n

- China would not fail to ensure that its access to overseas resources/markets and the oceanic trade routes are unhindered.

\n

\n\n

What irritants does India face?

\n\n

\n

- China is thus involved in a grand strategy to anchor its supremacy and eliminate any U.S.-led coalition in the Asian region.
\n
- There are several sources of fear for India which include:
\n

\n\n

- i. denying India entry into the Nuclear Suppliers Group
\n
- ii. repeatedly blocking UN sanctions against Pakistan-based terrorists
\n
- iii. ever-strengthening China-Pakistan military alliance
\n
- iv. ignoring India's sensitivity over the China-Pakistan Economic Corridor
\n
- v. revisionist claims in the land and oceanic space. E.g. revisionist statements on Sikkim and Arunachal Pradesh
\n
- vi. increasing naval presence, including dispatching its nuclear submarines on patrol, in the Indian Ocean.
\n
- vii. China, stepping up its political and economic footprint in the region \n

\n\n

Is India's current strategy effective?

\n\n

- Power - Currently, India is seemingly increasing its alliance with the US to deal with Beijing; most recently the Quad.
\n
- Amidst Chinese grand strategy, India's US-centric strategy could turn to be a spoiler. This is because:
\n

\n\n

- i. the US is a quickly-receding extra-regional power
\n
- ii. its long-term commitment to the Asian region is increasingly indeterminate and unsure
\n
- iii. the reliability of other alliance states like Japan to take forward firmly a strategic partnership with the U.S is highly uncertain

\n

iv. US-China relations are far more complex than the general assumptions

\n

\n\n

\n

- Economy - The second broad policy direction seems to be to compete with China for regional influence in South Asia.

\n

- Clearly, trying to match the powerful yuan, backed by vigorous political support from Beijing, with our humble rupee is a losing battle.

\n

- It is suggested that India should use its $70 billion-strong trading relationship with China as a bargaining chip to check Chinese behaviour.

\n

- But doing so would hurt both sides, especially India, given the fact that India-China bilateral trade is heavily skewed in favour of China.

\n

- Boycotting Chinese goods would also mean Indian consumers paying more to get them from elsewhere.

\n

- Military - Military preparedness to offset any potential Chinese aggression is something that India can and should invest in.

\n

- However, military preparedness, in which India is inevitably lagging behind China, alone cannot address the concerns.

\n

\n\n

What then should India's strategy be?

\n\n

\n

- One way is viewing China as part of the solution to the region's challenges.

\n

- A mutual 'complex interdependence' in economic, security and other domains should be strengthened by initiating structured consultations.

\n

- E.g. the current India-China joint anti-piracy missions in the Gulf of Aden.

\n

- India should certainly focus on the Indo-Pacific and consider cooperating with China, even while being part of the Quad.

\n

- India also needs to strategise a plan to nudge China towards playing a role so as to ensure a stable regional security order.
\n
- This is particularly in the context of its role in Pakistan, where China has to balance trade and terrorism.
\n
- Despite this strategy of mutual trust, the role of military strength in guaranteeing national security cannot be underestimated.
\n
- Thus, India would be better served by adopting a more nuanced strategy of 'smart-balancing' China.
