

Taking care of elderly population

What is the issue?

\n\n

India has fastest growing demography of Sixty-plus, yet there are no significant public policies to address the elderly.

\n\n

What is the status of senior citizens in India?

\n\n

\n

- Roughly 9 per cent of India's population is aged 60 years or more, as per Census figures from 2011, as opposed to 12 per cent globally.

\n

- By 2050, the 60+ age group is expected to form 19 per cent of India's population.

\n

- Kerala, Goa, Tamil Nadu, Punjab and Haryana are the top five states where the elderly comprise 10 per cent or more of the population.

\n

- While the north-eastern states of Arunachal Pradesh, Meghalaya, Nagaland, Mizoram and Assam have the smallest proportion of people aged 60 or more.

\n

\n\n

What are the problems faced by the elderly?

\n\n

\n

- Many rural families cannot afford a better care of the elderly, lakhs of elderly citizens live in penury.

\n

- Factors such as decreasing family size, migration of the young for work and abuse within the family makes the elderly stressful.

\n

- Such elderly people live alone, the majority of them women and are easy targets of crime.

\n

- Residential homes are not yet a viable alternative, only the economically privileged can afford private homes.

\n

- The majority of India's aged subsist on meagre support from the government.

\n

- The elderly has to face ambiguous processes and unhelpful and rude staff to receive elderly benefits from the government.

\n

\n\n

What are the role of the government in this regard?

\n\n

\n

- Caring for the elderly is a Directive Principle of State Policy under Article 41 of the Constitution.

\n

- The Indian government has been providing social pensions under the National Social Assistance Programme since 1995.

\n

- In 2007, the programme was reintroduced as the Indira Gandhi National Old Age Pension Scheme (IGNOAPS) for elderly people who belong to a below-poverty-line household.

\n

- The central government contributes Rs 200 per month towards pension for each person aged 60 years or above and Rs 500 per month for everyone aged 80 years and above.

\n

- State governments are expected to supplement this with at least a matching sum.

\n

- The draft National Policy for Senior Citizens of 2011 recommended an amount of Rs 1,000 as monthly pension under IGNOAPS.

\n

- Although the policy has not yet been finalised, some states have increased their contribution to comply with this recommendation.

\n

\n\n

Way forward

\n\n

\n

- By and large, pensions in most states remain meagre, varying from Rs 200-500, and it has no relevance to the cost of living today.
\n
- There is an ongoing public interest litigation (PIL) in the Supreme Court demands a basic old-age pension of Rs 2,000 per month.
\n
- The government must take action in this regard and make proper measures to support the elderly.
\n
- Government should not see them as mere vote banks instead recognise them as old assets of the nation.
