Terminologies with respect to Recession

- Expansionary Phase - When the overall output of goods and services (measured by the GDP) increases from one quarter (or month) to another, the economy is said to be in an expansionary phase.
- Recessionary Phase - When the overall output of goods and services (measured by the GDP) decreases from one quarter (or month) to another, the economy is said to be in a recessionary phase.
- In a recessionary phase, the GDP contracts from one quarter to another.
- Business Cycle - In an economy, the expansionary phase and recessionary phase together are called a “business cycle”.
- Recession - In an economy, when a recessionary phase sustains for long enough, it is called a recession i.e. when the GDP contracts for a long enough period, the economy is said to be in a recession.
- There is no universally accepted definition of a recession but most economists agree with the definition that the National Bureau of Economic Research (NBER) in the United States uses.
- According to NBER, “During a recession, a significant decline in economic activity spreads across the economy and can last from a few months to more than a year”.
- Technical Recession - The commentators often consider a recession to be in progress when real GDP has declined for at least two consecutive quarters in order to get around the empirical technicalities associated with the recession.
- The real quarterly GDP has been accepted as a measure of economic activity and a benchmark for ascertaining a “technical recession”.
- According to recent bulletin of Reserve Bank of India on state of economy there is a contraction for a second consecutive quarter (Quarter 2).
- The contraction of Q2 is crucial because it implies that India has entered a “technical recession” in the first half of 2020-21 for the first time in its history.
