What are these sanctions and certifications?

\n\n

\n

- Primary sanctions are sanctions imposed on the offending party or the country itself.

\n

- On the other hand, secondary sanctions are imposed on a third country that does business with the offending country.

\n

- In this context, the US administration has notably two obligations with regard to the Iran nuclear deal.

\n

- One, certifying every 90 days, confirming i) Iran's full compliance with the deal, ii) U.S's national security interests in continuing with the sanctions waiver.

\n

- This falls under the US's domestic law namely Iran Nuclear Agreement Review Act (INARA).

\n

- This obligation was rolled out with the objective to constrain the US presidential authority to waive sanctions on Iran.

\n

- Two, renewing every 120 days, the lifting of the U.S.'s secondary nuclear sanctions under JCPOA.

\n

- This is part of the international law.
\n
- The Trump's recent decision only decertifies the 90 days clause and not re-imposes the nuclear-related sanctions that were waived.
\n

\n\n

Why has the US not renewed the sanctions?

\n\n

- \n
- Trump had earlier remarked the JCPOA as the "worst deal ever".
\n
- Clearly, he could have withheld the latest (September) renewal of sanctions waiver and triggered re-imposition of secondary nuclear sanctions.
\n
- He did not do so because this would have violated the international law since the sanctions clause falls under the international law.
\n
- Also, Iran still remains in compliance with the JCPOA and enjoys international support.
\n
- Trump has therefore passed on the decision on sanctions to the U.S. Congress.
\n
- Trump's latest renewal of the waiver on secondary sanctions will hold for 120 days, till mid-January 2018.
\n
- This is why the U.S. sanctions have not kicked in yet.
\n
- Notably, Trump's decision to decertify the nuclear deal will not necessarily withdraw the US from the agreement.
\n

\n\n

What are the larger implications?

\n\n

- \n
- Only two countries have applauded Mr. Trump's decision; one, Saudi Arabia and two, Israel.
\n
- Europe - However, the US's move is clearly a sign of emerging divide between the US and the European allies, for the first time since 1945.

- \n
- Evidently, the German, French and British leaders have jointly declared their shared national security interests in preserving the JCPOA.
- \n
- The European Union officials have stated that the world could not afford to dismantle a successfully working nuclear agreement.
- \n
- Iran - Beyond the U.S.-Iran relations, Iran can make things difficult for the U.S. in Afghanistan as also in Iraq and Syria.
- \n
- The U.S.'s ability to work with Russia in Syria or with China regarding North Korea could also be impacted.
- \n
- More importantly, the move could demotivate Iran to comply with nuclear restrictions, which could have far-reaching implications on nuclear non-proliferations efforts.
- \n
- Business - It is to be noted that the sanctions relief applied only to secondary nuclear sanctions i.e. third country companies were free to engage with Iran.
- \n
- However, the primary sanctions continued i.e. certain U.S. companies still remained barred from dealings with Iran.
- \n
- Also, US can continue to impose even secondary sanctions against certain foreign entities for non-nuclear harmful activity.
- \n
- These business implications of the deal is sure to influence the global countries' stances and decisions on the issue.
- \n

\n\n

What lies ahead?

\n\n

- \n
- Congress - Trump now expects the Congress to end some of the sunset clauses of 10/15 years in the JCPOA by making it permanent.
- \n
- And also to establish new benchmarks on missile activities and regional behaviour for continuing sanctions relief.
- \n
- Trump - On the other hand, amending INARA in line with Trump's motive is also doubtful of getting through in the US Senate.

\n

- By all means, Trump would face a critical situation in January.
- \n
- Of either renewing the sanctions waiver for another 120 days (against his will) or withholding it, which would put the U.S. in violation of the JCPOA.
- \n
- Deal - In either case, the implication would be a renegotiation of the JCPOA.
- \n
- Given the present international scenario, any such move in UNSC would only attract a veto by both Russia and China.
- \n
- Iran is also not prepared to renegotiate the deal and many other countries have promised to uphold the deal.
- \n
- However, the challenge is to protect their companies from the U.S. sanctions if they continue their engagement with Iran.
