Indias engagement with Africa lays more emphasis on mutual development, whereas china's engagement with Africa is more to secure its self interest. Critically analyse.

1) Economic Development:

with respect to economic development china is dependent on manufacturing sector which is more dependent on raw material. And it dumps finished goods at a rate below cost of production destroying local manufacturing. while India has more service led growth saving it from the need of great resources.

2) ^{Energy} ~~Strategic~~ Needs:

India and china are importing majority of their oil requirement. In this regard africa is rich in hydrocarbons. Various chinese and African agencies are in hydrocarbon exploration projects in African countries.

3) Strategic Needs:

china Needs its Support from Africa not only for OBOR initiative but also for protection of its Future India has no intention to be a part of OBOR. It has Increased its military relationships with african countries as OBOR may pose a threat.

4) Health:

India is helping through its generic pharma industry by improving health, fight against TB and countless innumerable disease.

5) Political And Social development:

china have more responsibility as a member of UNSC. it has to take blame for policy paralysis in UNSC, growth of terrorist organization like Boko Haram, etc..
India has a wider respect in Africa because of presence of Indian doctors, teachers and nurses helping the conflict prone people with much needed relief and goodwill.
