India has achieved a remarkable feat in arresting Maternal Mortality Rate (MMR), but there is much more to do. Analyse

India at present has an Maternal Mortality rate of 130 per 100,000 live births. As per Sustainable development goals the Maternal Mortality rate of 70 per 100,000 live births. In order to achieve this target the country has to focus on few broad aspects.

1) The leading Cause of Maternal Mortality is Hemorrhage. To improve the Situation in this regard a national blood transfusion service ~~and~~ network has to be developed to ~~meet~~ meet the demand.

2) Free antenatal Service on the 9th day of every month is provided to ~~pregnant~~ pregnant women. In this regard the percentage of Mothers taking the checkup is only half. In order to improve the the Situation Call Centers to help and track pregnant women ~~would~~ to ensure that they check up on time can be Setup as followed in Telangana.

4) In few states the cash Incentive Scheme is provided only for Below poverty line women and for the 1st two child birth. The Scheme should be extended to all irrespective of Socio-economic status

5) As per several surveys educated girls are getting married after 18 years which in turn reduces MMR. Thus providing education to girls in rural area should be improved.

6) Different schemes provided by the government ~~under~~ for pregnant could be clubbed together under POSHAN Abhiyan for better delivery of services to women.

7) India is currently having 921:1 patient to doctor ratio but the recommended ratio is 1000:1. This situation has to be improved.

8) MMR rates are different for different states thus implementation of scheme should be based on the regional differences.

When compared to the earlier situation India has improved well in respect of MMR but more specific should be carried out from now to reduce the rate further.
