

India is doing well in the Asian games, 2018 with 15 gold medals as on Sep 1, but it is too early to showcase this as India's arrival on world stage. India should continue to do well in multi-national gaming events and should improve its performance in olympics to call itself a true sporting nation.

The Government is slowly increasing its efforts to support sports other than cricket. The establishment of national sports university is a good step and it should continue to expand such institutions to all other parts of the country.

The budget allotment for sports activities is less and the sports infrastructure in India is lagging far behind compared to other countries, India should take a serious step to allot more funds and to improve infrastructure.

India's performance at sport events depend on how well it provides advanced training facilities, financial stability to the sports persons.

If India continues & speed up its support to sports, it is not far to see India as a true sporting nation.